This kids' room in Memphis definitely got the pattern trend memo.

To start out the year, we're zeroing in on the trends that will dominate kids' rooms in 2023. We called on our favorite designers, almost all who happen to be parents themselves to ask: What kid room trends are you seeing on the rise, and why? Their answers range from a clever paint trick to an overarching trend towards safer materials. Read on to find out what these design pros are seeing in their crystal balls:

No More Neutrals

Annie Obermann, Principal Designer at Forge & Bow says she predicts pattern, pattern—and more pattern. “People have been playing it safe with neutrals for more than a decade. I think people are becoming more comfortable with bold expression, infusing multiple patterns and bold colors to create an eclectic space,” she says.

Caroline Brackett of Caroline Brackett Studio of Design agrees, “In recent years, there have been a lot of neutral kids rooms and nurseries, but that is becoming a thing of the past as bolder rooms take center stage,” she says. “We are seeing a lot of unexpected color combinations that are coming through patterned wallpaper, paint colors, and fabrics.”
